The mosaics that line the domes and upper walls of the basilica reflect light to create a magical golden glow. The basilica is sometimes known as the Church of Gold.

GROWING DOMES

The basilica's basic structure, made largely of brick with marble facing, has changed little through almost a thousand years. It is clearly modeled on the churches of the Byzantine empire. In the 13th century, the basilica's domes were raised externally by adding wooden frames roofed with lead. The shape of the original domes can still be seen inside the building.
