

February

14

1946

ENIAC announced

The first electronic, general-purpose computer, called Electronic Numerical Integrator And Computer (ENIAC), was revealed to the public at the University of Pennsylvania, USA. An all-women team programmed the computer.

2016

Revolutionary robot

Sophia – the first artificial intelligence (AI) humanoid robot – was switched on during her first public appearance in Austin, USA. She made speeches, told jokes, and appeared to show empathy.

Also on this day

1779 British explorer James Cook was killed in a fight with locals in Hawaii during his third voyage of discovery.

1928 Scottish scientist Alexander Fleming discovered penicillin, the world's first antibiotic.

1949 The Israeli Parliament, called Knesset, met for the first time in the capital city of Jerusalem following national elections.

269 CE

Valentine's Day

Saint Valentine was martyred in Rome. Many centuries later, his saint's day came to be associated with love letters and romance.

Akbar the Great

The third Mughal emperor, Akbar, came to the throne at the age of 13. For the next five decades, he expanded Mughal rule across much of the Indian subcontinent.

1556

Born this day

1914 Margaret E Knight, US inventor. She had 27 patents in her name, but is best known for creating flat-bottomed paper bags.