

HUNGRY HERD

Argentinosaurus, one of the largest land animals that has ever lived, had a huge appetite. Herds like this one would march across floodplains on a constant lookout for vegetation. The fossils of sauropod tracks show some species may have traveled in mixed-age herds. However, there is also evidence to suggest that adults and youngsters formed separate groups.

