

AFTER THE DINOSAURS

The era we live in today, the Cenozoic, began 66 million years ago with the extinction of many of the dominant reptile groups on land, in the air, and in the seas. This event opened up space for animals such as birds and mammals to occupy new habitats and adopt different lifestyles. A multitude of new species were about to evolve.