

Plant pollinator

Bees are essential for keeping our planet green.

They transfer pollen from flower to flower, pollinating many crops that we depend on for food. This mining bee is busy harvesting pollen from an apple blossom tree in Wisconsin. But climate change is affecting bee behavior, and intensive farming and pesticides are destroying bee habitats, such as wildflower meadows, trees, and hedgerows.