

When she saw her daughter again, Demeter's sadness melted, winter faded and the plants grew. However, Persephone had eaten six pomegranate seeds during her time in the Underworld, so each year she had to spend six months with Hades. For the other six months, she could be with her mother, and the seasons changed to spring and summer.

