

Prometheus lived among the people and taught them how to build homes, grow plants and hunt animals.

He begged Zeus to give them fire so they could cook and make metal tools, but Zeus refused.

“It will make them as powerful as the gods,” he said.

However, Prometheus stole some fire from the rising sun. When Zeus saw the people using fire, he was very angry and punished Prometheus severely.

Eternal punishment

For disobeying Zeus, Prometheus was chained to a high rock and had his liver torn out each day by an eagle. As he was immortal, his liver grew back every night.
