

King Midas looked after Silenus very well and then returned him to Dionysus, who lived by the banks of the River Pactolus. In thanks, Dionysus promised Midas any gift he wanted.

“Let everything I touch turn to gold,” replied Midas, greedily.

His wish was granted.

Mischievous satyrs

Satyrs were roguish male spirits of nature who roamed the woods and mountains. They were half-man and half-goat, and had horns, hooves and tails.
