

Medea gave Jason a potion to help with his task.

When Jason and his crew finally landed on the coast of Colchis, they went straight to the palace. As soon as they arrived, Jason asked for an audience with the king and found himself standing in front of Aeëtes and his family.

The mischievous god of love, Eros, was watching. He decided to play a trick.

Eros made Aeëtes' daughter Medea fall passionately in love with Jason. She hung on Jason's every word when he spoke to her father. "Aeëtes," said Jason, "I have been sent here to ask for the golden fleece. I cannot return home without it. I will do anything you ask of me in exchange for it."

At this, Aeëtes laughed nastily. "Fine," he said snidely. "Tomorrow you will have a chance to win the fleece. I want you to harness the fire-breathing bulls I keep. Then you must plow a field outside my palace and sow this bag of dragon's teeth." Jason accepted Aeëtes' challenge, but Medea was very worried.

Luckily, Medea was no ordinary princess.

She was also a witch and skilled in magic. That night, she went to find Jason. "I wish to help you," she said, "but you must make me a promise first. My father will be furious I aided you, so you must take me home with you and make me your wife."

"Of course!" said Jason, glad of the clever Medea's assistance.
