

To the ancient Greeks, myths were the same as history—they believed that all of the fantastical events in them had really happened once upon a time. The myths were their way of making sense of the past, even as far back as how the world was created.

These are the stories of the very first gods and goddesses, the mystical beings who forged the Earth and set rules for all others to follow.