

Pegasus and Bellerophon dived close to the fearsome chimaera.

they could circle the chimaera from above. Then they dived down quickly, weaving and wheeling to avoid the jets of fiery breath from the angry monster.

Between the chimaera's attacks, Pegasus darted in closer so Bellerophon could draw his bow and fire his arrows, while ducking out of the way of the snapping dragon tail. Eventually, one of Bellerophon's arrows struck the chimaera's neck, and it dropped to the floor, dead.

King Iobates was delighted. He gave Bellerophon permission to marry his daughter, Princess Philonoe, and made him heir to the kingdom. There, Bellerophon ruled, with Pegasus as his steed.
