This is an essential reference tool for anyone interested in languages—practical, stimulating, and easy to use.

A few things to note

The Hindi terms in the dictionary use the Devnagari script, and are accompanied by their romanized versions, showing you how to pronounce each word. The entries in the dictionary are always presented in the same order—English, the romanization, and then Hindi. Where no suitable Hindi words exist, or are not commonly used, we have retained the English words, but the romanization has been adapted to show how native Hindi speakers would pronounce them.

Verbs are indicated by a (v) after the English, for example: attend (v)

There are two indexes at the back of the book—English and Hindi—that you can use to look up a word and find out on which page it appears. In the Hindi index, the masculine and feminine nouns are indicated by “m” and “f,” and the transitive and intransitive verbs are indicated by “tr” and “itr.”

This book romanizes Hindi by dropping the “a” normally used to represent the Hindi vowel “अ” that is attached to all Hindi consonants. Traditionally, “लोग” (people) would be transcribed as “loga,” but we have used “log” to help you pronounce it more accurately. The exception to this is the Hindi consonant “य,” represented by the roman “ya,” where we have retained the “a” to keep the pronunciation accurate. For example, स्वास्थ्य is romanized as “svāsthya.”

The nukta is the dot below the consonants “क,” “ख,” “ग,” “ज,” and “फ,” used to denote Urdu pronunciation. Consonants with nuktas are romanized using a dot under the roman consonant. They are pronounced with greater stress.

The dot under “ṛ” is a half consonant, and is used to denote the sound “ang” as in “kangaroo.”
