

Millipedes and centipedes

Members of the Myriapod family, like millipedes and centipedes, can have up to 750 legs! They use them for tunneling underground and chasing prey. Some centipedes even use their pointy legs to injure enemies.

MILLIPEDES

Millipedes are slow-moving creepy-crawlies. They use their many legs to tunnel, pushing their smooth, rounded bodies through soil and decaying vegetation. Most millipedes are vegetarians, feasting on dead plants and fallen leaves.

Some millipedes, including the African giant millipede, roll into balls when they are frightened.

Giant brown millipede

Red millipede

Pill millipedes

Pill millipede

Dragon millipede

Bumblebee millipede

Millipedes have two pairs of short legs on each body segment.