

BUG HABITATS

Bugs are everywhere! Wherever you are in the world, you are sure to have some bug neighbors living close by.

Millions of years ago, the first bugs lived in the ocean. Now they have spread all over the planet. They can be found in the sky, burrowing underground, and in many places in between.

Bugs can survive in the toughest of places.

From hot, dry deserts, to icy mountain peaks, bugs are experts at adapting to their environments. Some bugs even take over the homes of other bugs and animals!

Read on to discover beautiful and bizarre bug habitats...

Monarch butterflies avoid cold North American winters by making long journeys to warm Mexican woodlands. Once there, they spend months sleeping in clusters on trees.
