

PIGS

Uniquely in their order, the Old World Suidae have four toes, although they walk only on the middle two. They have a simple stomach, unlike the chambered stomach of most of their relatives. Largely omnivorous, they dig with their snout and tusks for food. They have bristly coats and a short tail that ends in a long tassle.

COMMON WARTHOG

Phacochoerus africanus

This pig has a warty face and two pairs of tusks. It often feeds on its front knees when grazing, and runs with its tail erect.

65–80 cm
26–32 in

55–85 cm
22–34 in

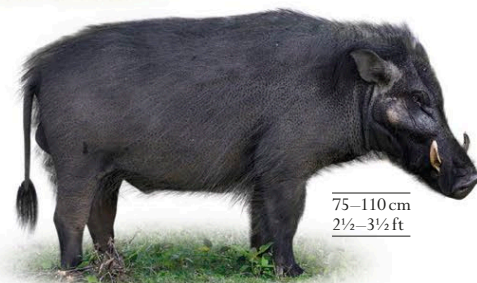

MOLUCCAN BABIRUSA

Babyrousa babyrussa

Males of this species have remarkable tusks: the upper canines grow upwards, pierce the snout, and curve backwards. It is native to some Indonesian islands.

609

75–110 cm
2½–3½ ft

GIANT FOREST HOG

Hylochoerus meinertzhageni

Unlike most pigs, this large, nocturnal wild species from Africa has a thick covering of black and ginger fur.

60–85 cm
23½–34 in

BUSHPIG

Potamochoerus larvatus

Found in African forests and reedbeds, this pig has brown fur, and a pale mane, which stands upright when the animal is alarmed.

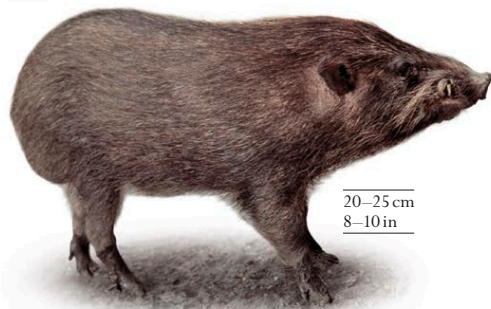

rounded back

55–80 cm
22–32 in

RED RIVER HOG

Potamochoerus porcus

This richly coloured pig from C. Africa has a pair of lumps on its snout, and distinctive white facial markings.

20–25 cm
8–10 in

PYGMY HOG

Porcula salvania

Once spread across India and Nepal, this tiny, dark brown pig with a sharply tapered snout is now critically endangered.

90 cm
35 in

VISAYAN WARTY PIG

Sus cebifrons

Three pairs of fleshy warts on the face protect this boar against the tusks of rival males while fighting.

90 cm
35 in

BEARDED PIG

Sus barbatus

Found in the forests of S.E. Asia, this pig often moves in large herds. It sports a whitish "beard" and distinct tail tassels.

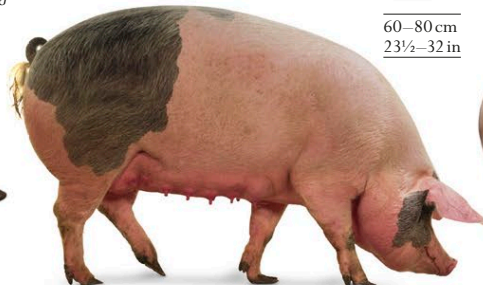

narrow mane
of longer hair

55–110 cm
22–43 in

WILD BOAR

Sus scrofa

Widespread in Eurasia, the bristly wild boar is the main ancestor of domestic pigs. The piglets have stripes along the body for camouflage in dense thickets.

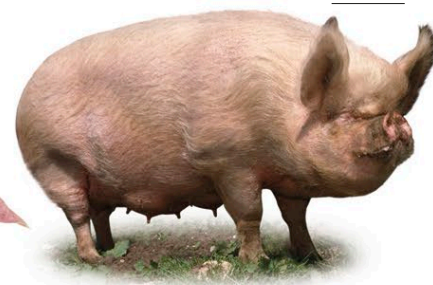

60–80 cm
23½–32 in

PIÉTRAIN PIG

Sus scrofa domestica

A Belgian domestic breed that produces high-quality, lean meat, this pig has dark spots set within paler blotches on its body.

70–80 cm
28–32 in

MIDDLE WHITE PIG

Sus scrofa domestica

Reared in England for pork, this pig is an unpigmented domestic breed, characterized by its round form and short, upturned nose.

>>