“ACQUISITIONS That Help Address Gaps In Our Design Capabilities..... INTEREST US”

Over the past five years, Cyient DLM (formerly Rangsons Electronics), a subsidiary of Cyient Limited, has rapidly expanded its footprint in the design-led manufacturing industry through strategic acquisitions. EFY's Yashasvini Razdan interviewed Cyient's CFO, Shrinivas Kulkarni, to explore the company's inorganic growth strategy amidst shifting market dynamics over the past six months.

What is the strategy behind an acquisition?

Acquisitions are often undertaken to address strategic gaps and position the company more effectively. In many cases, an inorganic approach enables faster progress than organic growth. Cyient DLM actively seeks assets that align with its strategic goals and accelerate progress.

Our recent acquisition of Torrington-based Altek Electronics not only aligns with our operations but also introduces new capabilities. With North America as a key market, given the concentration of our customer base there, this acquisition strengthens our manufacturing presence in the region while facilitating business expansion and customer acquisition.
