Tariff turbulence tests India's $10.5 billion electronics export engine

Amid escalating US tariffs, India's electronics sector, including $10.5 billion in smart-phone exports (FY25), remains resilient. However, US duties, particularly on semi-conductors, could lead to a $20-30 billion loss. Manufacturers are halting expansion plans and exploring new export markets like Europe and Southeast Asia to reduce reliance on the US, which accounted for 38% of India's total electronics exports. Tariff uncertainty is prompting a strategic rethink in the industry.
